Visual Anthropology is a course that explores the intersection of visual culture and anthropology. It examines how visual representations (such as film, photography, and digital media) are used to construct and communicate cultural knowledge. The course covers topics such as the history of visual anthropology, the role of the ethnographic camera, and the use of visual media in contemporary research and practice. Students will engage with both theoretical and practical aspects of the field, including the analysis of visual texts and the production of their own visual ethnographic work.
