Directed Readings Registration Instructions

Directed Readings credits serve as an optional independent course in which students work closely on a specialized topic of interest related to their research program. This work is completed under the supervision of a faculty member who has agreed to work with you. For further information on these credits, as well as credits for Directed Research or the Doctoral Research Tutorial, see the Department of Communication Graduate Handbook.

Use the following instructions to enroll in Directed Readings

1. Determine the topic on which you'd like to focus your learning. As noted above, this is typically something related to students' research program, so keep your Plan of Study, more specifically, your dissertation, thesis, MA exams in mind.
2. Once you've identified a topic and faculty member, set up a time to meet with them to see if they're able and willing to work with you. It will be in your best interest to talk with the potential supervisor about this possibility as soon as possible and before their calendar fills up.
3. Once you've secured someone to work with, it's time to write the syllabus or description that will guide the course. Be sure to write this document in specific and detailed ways, and make sure it includes the following information:
 - a. your name, the faculty member's name, and title of the course
 - b. a detailed description or overview of the topic you'll study
 - c. the learning objectives you'll pursue within the course
 - d. the assignments you'll complete, when each assignment will be due, how each will be submitted, how each will be graded, and the weight each assignment will contribute towards your overall grade.
 - e. a schedule for when you and the supervisor will meet to discuss your progress throughout the course
 - f. the list of the readings you'll complete in the course. If the G @ 9 & 0 (+ A $) 0 M ~ Q

5. When your proposed Directed Readings is approved by the Director of Graduate Studies, the Academic Program Specialist will send the document around via DocuSign and once signatures are in place, they will send you a permit number to use to register for this course!
